Social Side of Washington

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
 Washington, D. C., January 14.—With the first reception of the season at the White House, complimentary to the foreign official corps, whose uniforms, together with those of the officers of the United States Army and Navy and the handsome gowns of the women, made the most brilliant ensemble of any single occasion of the winter, the change took place, as usual, brought together a large and interesting company of folk representing every circle in social society to dance and make merry for the benefit of sick and needy in the Children's Hospital, the second Roosevelt Symphony Orchestra concert, with the incomparable Masha Khaman as soloist, the first regular day "at home" of Cabinet, diplomatic and congressional hostesses, and much extra entertainment incident to the arrival of a remarkable number of distinguished men here for convalescence of international importance, the week has been a busy, merry one for official society.

The diplomatic reception on Tuesday night was of prime interest because of the historic record as the most brilliant function of the winter season, and because of the unusual number of new official households to be met for the first time. Then, too, society was on the qui vive of expectancy over the query, "Would Baroness Henselmueller be present with her distinguished husband, the Austrian-Hungarian ambassador, to lead the hosts of honor?" She was not sufficiently recovered from her recent illness to dress for the occasion, and so passed the opportunity of her life to be observed of all observers as domino of the diplomatic corps at the state function in the honor of the White House, though next week she may be there for the state dinner to be given by President and Mrs. Taft when the same circle, of which she is the bright, particular social star, will be specially entertained, according to official custom.

Some of the interest which in former years centered around the Chinese minister and his entourage, the only foreigners who still use their native dress, is now transferred to the Turkish ambassador's household, which includes for the first time in history a child, the daughter of the minister, an American wife to the dynasty in the situation. The lady who thus unofficially divides with the President's daughter the honor of being frequently designated as "the crowd" and made the subject of much interested comment, was formerly Miss Mary Pelton, a Virginian, born in New York, educated in Paris, and some time resident of Constantinople.

Richmond, Sir John and Lady Harrington, with the latter's mother, Mrs. James McMillan; Mrs. James, of Chicago, who came with her brother-in-law and sister, Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. MacVeagh; Mrs. Hall, of Richmond, who with the new Junior Senator from Virginia, and Mrs. Claude Swanson renewed the acquaintance of many whom they knew when Sir Swanson was a member of the House of Representatives, from which place he went to the Governor's chair in the Old Dominion.

 From Louisiana came Governor Sanders, and from Mississippi Governor Noel, ex-Senator Gordon, of ephemeral senatorial fame, and Senator-Elect John Sharp Williams—a party easily recognized as "boomers" of New Orleans as the "logical point" for the Panama Exposition in 1915.

 Canada sent W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, and William Patterson, Minister of Customs, here as delegates to conclude reciprocity negotiations with this country, and happily they arrived in time to witness the reception, which would give them the best impression of the way we do things in Washington. With them there, and again at the dinner at the White House on Wednesday evening, were Mrs. Fielding and her daughter, Miss Edith Fielding, whose days are spent pleasantly sightseeing with Mrs. Ashton, or a member of the British embassy staff.

 Rev. and Mrs. John W. Dulles, of Albany, who are here to celebrate their silver wedding anniversary at the home of their parents, General and Mrs. Foster, on Friday, and present their daughter, Margaret, to capital society, to-day received many congratulations in anticipation of these events.
